If you regularly fold 60-degree angles, this will have a lot of familiar elements. We want to make a set of creases like this in each corner of the paper:

There are two ways of getting to this point. Personally, I prefer the second as it gives cleaner lines and no surplus creases, but the first is possibly easier to follow.

Method 1

1. Crease into quarters and bring sides to centre.

2. Mark a crease at the centre of the left-hand flap. Don’t crease the whole way up and down; you just want a guide line.

3. Make a fold that starts at bottom centre and brings the bottom right corner to lie on the guide crease you have just made.

4. Crease through both layers of paper on the red line. Try not to let the crease go past the centre of the paper.
1. Again, start by creasing into quarters. Make a fold that starts at bottom centre and brings the bottom right corner onto the left-hand quarter crease. Don’t fold all the way to the edge; stop when you hit the vertical crease.

2. Fold that corner back down to the bottom. At the same time, fold the right-hand edge to centre. Flatten everything out (you make a new fold in the process).

3. You now have an inside reverse fold. Crease the red line through both layers of paper, but don’t crease past the centre line.

Chosen your preferred method? Great. On to the folding.
1. Whichever way you used, open it up and check that the creases look like this.

2. Mirror it on the other side.

3. Rotate 180 degrees

4. Repeat so that all four corners are done. Bring left and right edges to centre and rotate 90 degrees.

5. Mountain fold in half

6. Outside reverse fold on the red line

7. Take the top corner (in red) and pull it out and down. The pocket will open up and form a triangle.

8. Repeat behind.
9. Valley fold the top triangle in half. Turn the model over.

10. Zoom in on the left-hand side

11. Take the top corner and pull it down in front of the model. A new crease (shown in red) will form.

12. In progress. Flatten it all out.

13. The head is finished. Zooming out again.

14. Outside reverse fold on the red line.

15. Turn over

16. Valley fold red line. Turn over again.
17. Valley fold red line. Tuck the flap into the pocket formed by the top layer of paper.

18. Valley fold red line

19. Fluff it up and you’re done!
